PACIFIC COAST NEWS.

CALIFORNIA

The Storm Still Prevails.

YREKA, Jan 28—It commenced raining here about dark last night and continued almost incessantly till now. The streams have all risen greatly during the day. Yreka creek has come up from a small stream this morning to a large river this evening, and is now as high as it has been for years. The Klamath river, when the stage was ferried over this morning, was rising very rapidly and it was expected that the return stage would be unable to get over. This evening Shasta river is over its banks again but no damage has been done as yet. The C & O Co's stage which arrived here to-day brought the first mail that had got to Redding since the 15th. The stage was unable to cross Pit river and the mail was sent across in a skiff. All the rivers and creeks are so high that it is not expected that the stages will be able to cross them to-day.

Accident in a Mine.

Yesterday Charles Nesbit and young man named Jones were seriously injured at the Warren and Nesbit quartz mine, on Cherry creek, by the explosion of a blast. They were drawing a charge which had failed to go off when fired, and while at work at it, it went off. Nesbit has both arms broken between the wrists and elbows, the right hand was shattered and had to be amputated; the third and fourth finger of the left hand and part of the thumb are gone, and perhaps the whole hand will have to be amputated. Jones' right eye is gone, and he is likely to lose the other. Both are powder burned and cut with rocks in the face badly.

Better Signs.

The wind has changed and indications are that the storm is over.

VICTOR EMMANUEL

The New York Times has the following interesting article on the late King of Italy:

With monarchs it is usually the station that dignifies the man. To the dead King of Italy belongs the honor of having made modern kingship heroic. The Homeric ideal of a king was the leader and protector of his people. The Bourbon theory of kingship was that the nation belonged to the king and that he had a divine right to use it for his personal pleasure. Coming to the throne at a period when the Bourbon theory was maintained by the might of European armies, Victor Emmanuel broke with the traditions of modern monarchy, and chose rather to be the hero of a free nation than the despotic ruler of his ancient patrimony. He could not have foreseen that the heroic age of Italy was close at hand, and that twenty-seven millions of Italians were to choose him as their leader. When his weak father abdicated the throne of Sardinia, the cause of Italian nationality seemed utterly crushed, and not even Mazzini was bold enough to dream that within twelve years Italy would be something more than a geographical expression. Victor Emmanuel chose honesty and patriotism, not in pursuance of a scheme of far reaching ambition, but because in him the chivalrous qualities inherited from the soldier kings of Savoy were untainted by the selfishness and treachery of Carlo Felice and Carlo Alberto. He was honest, patriotic and brave, because he could not be otherwise, and as the splendor of his subsequent fortune did not corrupt the simplicity and nobility of his character, neither could an uneventful reign over the petty province of Sardinia have changed the born hero into a dull and vicious tyrant.

It is the fashion to assign to Victor Emmanuel a subordinate place in the creation of United Italy. Cavour has been called the brain, and Garibaldi the sword, of Italy, while it has been assumed that the King, though a gallant and honest gentleman, was merely the standard around which others rallied the Italian people. This however betrays only a superficial acquaintance with the Italian revolution. While every one concedes that Victor Emmanuel possessed clear, strong, common sense, it is probable that he was not intellectually a great man. Nevertheless, had he been weak or dishonest the Italian Kingdom would not have been born. Could Cavour have brought the public opinion of liberal Europe and the army of Napoleon to the support of a cause represented by the King of Naples? would Garibaldi have drawn his sword for the Grand Duke of Tuscany? or would the Italian people, of whatever political creed, have accepted a second time a Pope as their leader? Without the name of the loyal Sardinian King with which to conjure the diplomatic spell of Cavour would have been woven in vain, and the aspirations of Italian patriotism would have been powerless to disturb the dead weight of Austrian armies. Before Italy could become a nation it was essential that an Italian monarch who could be trusted to the uttermost should take the leadership of all factions of the people. With Victor Emmanuel Italy became possible. Without him, neither the brain of Cavour nor the sword of Garibaldi could have accomplished their immortal work.

If the share of Victor Emmanuel in the work of national independence was inferior to that of no other man, neither was he inferior to any in all noble and knightly qualities. Cavour could sacrifice principle to expediency, as when prior to 1848, he drafted a law for the suppression of freedom of the press, but history can point to no instance in which the King swerved a hair's breadth from the strictest loyalty to free constitutional government. No man could be braver than Garibaldi, but the prince who was wounded at Goito, and who led the last wild charge at Novara, never knew the meaning of fear. He had the faults as well as the virtues of a soldier, but his errors injured no man but himself. Cowardice, treachery, and cruelty were alike foreign to his nature, and the king whom Garibaldi called "his friend" was worthy of that more than royal title.

Death has reaped a rich harvest in Italy since the Italian kingdom was constituted. Cavour died while Rome and Venice were yet in chains. Sirtori, the soldier priest who took Milan from the Austrians and fought with Manin at Venice, was the first on the death roll of the Garibaldians, and he was soon followed by Bixio, the companion of Garibaldi in South America and in Rome and in Sicily, and the savior of the routed army at Custozza, who died in the China seas while looking for an island on which to found a new empire. Farini, Fanti, and La Farina, men whom Cavour thought worthy to be his associates in government, have long since vanished, and but yesterday that grim old drill sergeant La Marmora who forged the rude Sardinian conscripts into the iron [illegible] them who fought in the Crimea, but whose hand was too feeble to wield the [illegible] weapon that he grasped at Custozza [illegible] a royal commander [illegible] Last of all the king died also, and we who believe that the brave and [illegible] live beyond the grave cannot doubt that [illegible] welcomed to immortality [illegible] Sirtori and Bixio [illegible] statesman, Cavour and [illegible] —La Marmora—as yet [illegible] how few kings have been [illegible] Paradise.

CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE

[illegible] EXTENSION OF TIME TO THE NORTHERN PACIFIC

From the Chicago Inter Ocean we take the following resolutions. That paper as well as the Times of the same city which heretofore has opposed land grants, seeing how important [illegible] enterprises for the development of the great northwest, warmly supports the action of the Chicago board of trade. This action by the board was taken on the 1st December.

WHEREAS, This board is advised that a bill is pending in congress having for its object the extension of time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad, the prosecution of that work having been interrupted by the financial revulsion of 1873 and the resulting embarrassment to all railway construction enterprises; and

WHEREAS, The direct interests of the states of Oregon and Minnesota, and the territories of Dakota, Montana, Idaho and Washington, and the scarcely less direct interests of all the states and territories north of the forty second parallel of latitude and west of the great lakes, and the interests of all the northern and middle states east of the Mississippi valley render it desirable that this great work shall be speedily completed in order to develop the wonderful agricultural and mineral resources of the first named states and territories, and to afford the country at large the great commercial advantages of the development of a vast area of territory hitherto nearly unoccupied by civilization, and also that by furnishing the means of rapid transit by which government may be able to protect its own and the safety and interests of its people already flocking to this new territory, and the advantages to be derived from dividing the traffic and lessening the cost of through transit and transportation between the Atlantic and Pacific states, together with the fact that the company at present in control and contemplating the completion of the work asks no subsidies but merely the extension of time within which the line shall be required to be completed and within which it may be entitled to claim the grants and franchises provided in the original act. Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the board of trade respectfully urges the congress of the United States to enact at the present session such measure as will result in the extension of the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad, and that our members of congress use all honorable means to this end, for the reasons:

1. That it is simply justice to the large number of bondholders who loaned the money that has constructed 600 miles of the Northern Pacific railroad and who under the present reorganization of the company have become stockholders and therefore owners of the line to give them time to save their large investment by completing the road.
2. That another transcontinental railway is needed to reduce the present high cost of freight and travel between the Atlantic and the Pacific.
3. That the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad would practically put an end to the Indian wars in the northern half of the United States, would speedily settle the territories of Dakota, Montana, Idaho, and Washington, would bring into market a belt of public domain several hundred miles wide from the Missouri river to the Pacific and would give to trade and commerce the shortest route to China and Japan.

UNCLE TOBY

All who have lingered with delight over this creation of genius will appreciate the following from the Cornhill Magazine:

We all know and love Uncle Toby, but we feel quite sure that no such man ever existed except in Sterne's brain. There may have been some being who vaguely suggested him and he is, we assume, the creation of Sterne, and the projection into concrete form of certain ideas which had affected Sterne's imagination. He is not, indeed, nor is any fictitious character, a creation out of nothing. Partly, no doubt, he is Sterne himself, or Sterne in a particular mood; but Uncle Toby's soul, that which makes him live and excite our sympathy and love, is something which might be expressed by the philosopher as a theory, and which has been expressed in an outward symbol by an artist of extraordinary skill. Don Quixote is of perennial interest because he is the most powerful type ever set forth of the contrast between the ideal and the common place, and his figure comes before us whenever we are forced to meditate upon some of the most vital and most melancholy truths about human life. Uncle Toby, in a far less degree, is a great creation, because he is the embodiment of one answer to a profound and enduring problem. He represents, it has been said, the wisdom of love, as Mr Shandy [illegible] exemplifies the love of wisdom. More precisely, he is an incarnation of the sentimentalism of the eighteenth century. It is a phenomenon which has its bad and its good side, and which may be analyzed and explained by historians of the time. Sterne, in describing Uncle Toby, gives a concrete symbol for one of the most important currents of thought of the time, which had religious, moral and political as well as artistic shapes. In many ways the sentiment has lost much of its interest for us, but, though an interesting [illegible] perfect doctrine, we may infer that Uncle Toby's soul will transmigrate into new shapes and perhaps develop into higher forms.

DOCTRINE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.—A dispatch from Chicago to the New York Times says: The Methodist clergymen of this city are becoming decidedly stirred up over the discussion of the question of future punishment and the probability of a hell of fire and brimstone, all of which has grown out of the emphatic stand taken by Rev Dr Thomas in his sermon of last Sunday night. At the regular weekly meeting of these persons to-day it was determined to take up at the next meeting the subject "How shall we teach the doctrine of future punishment." Several of the more prominent clergymen thought that to discuss this question was to advertise to the world that the Methodist ministers of Chicago were all at sea on this subject. They were in favor of an authoritative statement from the presiding bishop, but were not ready to confess that they needed instruction how to teach the doctrine. It was time for such a statement when having [illegible] reporters [illegible] Methodist ministers [illegible] the street [illegible] Oh yes [illegible] give up your hell, haven't you.

DR FARRAR'S SERMON

PORTLAND, Jan 28, 1878.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN:

We have read the whole of Farrar's much talked of sermon, and while it is true that the general drift of it is correct, it is the popular deductions from it, unfortunately, we believe, that it was wholly unfortunate and uncalled for. It seems to have been intended to comfort that class of persons with whom the affairs of this world have not gone smoothly. Or in other words, it is easy to be an excuse for [illegible] among the poor and uneducated masses. Another and we believe a better way will suggest itself to every reader. Much of the misery of this world is self made and self sought. And the poor need to be taught that poverty has no more temptations than riches have, and that the poor man's sins are as sinful as the rich man's. Dr Farrar says:

> Walk at night in squalid purlieus not far even from this Abbey where glaring gin palaces are busy and amid the reek of alcohol you may hear snatches of foul oaths and odious song—streets where women sit shuddering in wretched garrets to think of the brutal hands that will strike, of the brutal feet that will kick them when the drunkard staggers home, and where the young lads of the schools over which we spend so many millions of money are being daily ruined and depraved by being lured into low haunts of gambling and degradation.

All this is doubtless very dreadful. But all these people are endowed with free will and make this choice as much as any other class in the community. If Dr Farrar wanted to comfort the poor he might have told them that the good Lord sees and knows every effort of theirs to serve Him and that he will make up to them in the life to come that which they have been deprived of here. It is doubtless true that poverty has many and sore trials, but our blessed Lord has consecrated poverty, and the sooner the poor are taught that the evils of poverty are not in poverty itself but in the degradation to which it may lead, unless struggled against, the better it will be for the world. There is a sentimentalism on this subject which is ruinous to public morals. There are honest poor men as well as honest rich ones. And the poor are called upon as loudly as the rich are, to do their duty in their state of life and to live honestly, soberly and righteously in this present world.

Again Dr Farrar sets up an idea of hell which does not exist except in the imagination of the poor, and then goes to work to demolish it. Here is what he says:

> What the popular notion of hell is, you my brethren are all aware. It is that the moment a human being dies at whatever age, under whatever disadvantages his fate is sealed hopelessly and forever, and that, if he die in unrepented sin, that fate is a never ending agony amid physical tortures the most frightful that can be imagined, so that when we think of the future of the human race we must conceive of a vast and burning prison in which the lost souls of millions writhe and shriek forever, tormented in a flame that never will be quenched.

Now, we submit that this is not the popular idea of hell. And if Dr Farrar did not believe in it, why could he not tell us so and then inform us what he does believe? For he does believe in future punishment. He says:

> I say nothing to uphold the Romish doctrine of purgatory. I cannot accept the spreading belief in conditional immortality. I cannot preach the certainty of what is called universalism—that is the view that all will finally be saved.

And a little further on, he says:

> There is hope for the mourners. Oh, they shall be comforted, though you too, if you should continue in sin, may have to be purified in that gehenna of aeonian fire beyond the grave.

We rather think the doctor is at sea on this subject. He says "nothing to uphold the Romish doctrine of purgatory," and yet we may have to be purified in gehenna! We wonder what kind of doctrine he calls that. He cannot accept the doctrine of universalism and yet the general drift of his sermon is that all men will somehow and sometime be saved! On the whole the sermon is an unfortunate one, one of those sermons that cannot possibly do good while they may do much harm. We hope the canon's trumpet will give a little less uncertain sound next time and rather encourage men to love and serve God than to make them hope that they may live as they will and at last be numbered with the saved.

GEORGE F PLUMMER

OREGON

Farmers and others in Baker have organized a joint stock company which will build a large flouring mill. Such an establishment is much wanted.

At Eagle Point, Jackson county, some days ago a little boy named Eddy McCord, seven or eight years of age, fell on a sharp stub of chapparal which penetrated the lower part of the body, causing a wound which the surgeon says must prove fatal.

P D Stewart, Past Grand Sire I O O F, whose death was recently announced by telegraph, was a member of the Wilkes exploring expedition that visited this coast in the year 1841. Mr Stewart was on board the Peacock in the capacity of draughtsman.

A man named Wilson who is herding sheep for Major Barnhart in Umatilla county was robbed recently of notes to the amount of $600 or $700, a gun and a dog. It is believed the robbery was perpetrated by a man whom Wilson had employed to assist him.

Letter from Lake county: J I Applegate is one of the large stock men of this country. His stock are wintering finely. He has just sold and delivered 150 head of beeves to Wilson and Ramsey, who intend to drive ere long to the Sacramento market. Fine beef buyers in every settlement anxiously searching for beef and ready to exchange gold coin for anything that will make good beef.

Baker Democrat: Eastern Oregon is famous for her pleasant winters, and the present is only a sample of those in general, only a little more so. We have not had to exceed one inch of snow this winter, and the ground is bare now, and the mercury has not been to zero but one morning. Stock is making its own living in the valley and on the foothills. The snow in the mountains is not as deep as usual and the prospects for a good mining season are not as flattering as we could wish, but there is still time for more snow.

LAKE COUNTY

It has been supposed that Lake county would not prove a good agricultural county on account of the high altitude and continued frost, but a correspondent of the Ashland Tidings presents important facts which correct the error of this supposition. We quote:

We all understood this to be a great stock country, for its many advantages in that regard are [illegible] generally [illegible] that there are [illegible] government land which [illegible] upon cultivation will soon [illegible] Lakeville [illegible]

ELECTIONS IN SOUTH CAROLINA

Columbia Cor. Jan [illegible] N Y Times.

In November 1876 C B Johnson, a white [illegible], was elected to the legislature from Sumter county by a majority of 1,500. Being required to make an [illegible] the house of representatives [illegible] Hampton, having adhered to the Chamberlain legislature during the struggle of that year, he declined to thus stultify himself, and a new election was ordered to take place on the 15th of last month to fill the vacancy. His brother, J B Johnson, ran on the Republican ticket and received about 1,000 majority. The Republicans brought out their full vote only two days before the day of election and caught the Democrats napping. When it was known that the boxes as taken to the court house for final action on the returns would show a Republican majority, a gang of Democrats broke into the commissioners' room and carried off seven boxes containing the bulk of the Republican votes. Notwithstanding this theft, however, those left behind obliged the commissioners to give the certificate of election to the Republican.

In Beaufort county also last month a special election was held for senator. All the commissioners of election were Democrats. They appointed Democrats as managers at the various precincts. J W Collins, the Republican candidate, received 4,[illegible] votes; Elliott, Democrat, 1,[illegible]; a Republican majority of [illegible]. The election commissioners threw out upon various frivolous pretenses seven boxes containing Republican majorities, which reduced Collins' majority to about 1,600. Even this would seem to be sufficiently large to secure the seat, and yet the Democratic organs say that on account of alleged irregularities the contest is transferred to the senate. The irregularities referred to are the work of Democratic managers in heavy Republican precincts. They consist in one or more of the managers leaving the precincts when it was discovered that a heavy vote was likely to be thrown; in refusing to sign returns; in failing to carry in the boxes on time; in closing the boxes too soon or opening them too early; and lastly to forward the returns to the secretary of state instead of to the president of the senate—all with the intent to vitiate the returns. As the whole machinery of the election was in the hands of the Hampton appointees, these tricks were easily performed.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE SILVER SCHEME

There are many who do not expect the president to veto the Bland-Matthews silver bill. A correspondent of the Sacramento Record-Union, writing from Washington, says the silver men expect fully to capture him. The writer of this letter, which is dated Jan 8th, says:

The silver men seem to have swallowed him entire. The Republican (silver organ) of this morning says: "We now state upon what we regard as high authority, that the executive will sign the silver bill whenever it shall be submitted to him. He believes it to be a measure demanded by the business interests of the country and a majority of the people of the United States, and hence will cheerfully give it his official sanction." So positive a statement as that is very disquieting to the gold men, and as the president is fast winning reputation as a vacillating man it would not surprise them at all should it prove true. One politician of some moment (a gold man) remarked bitterly to me to-day: "I have no doubt that it is true. It is the logic of Hayes politics. He invariably goes back on his principles and best friends whenever it suits his convenience. He went back on the bloody shirt issue which he had himself urged campaigners to bring out strong; he went back on his professed civil service principles; why should he not go back on honest hard money? He went back on Packard and the Louisiana returning board who gave him his election; on Conkling and Cameron who gave him the presidential nomination, and of course he must go back on John Sherman, whose letter brought him out as the Ohio candidate. It is the inevitable logic of his political nature to go back on everything and everybody."

INTERESTING BUT DOUBTFUL

The following report of an interview with Senator Dick Oglesby of Illinois on the silver question is published. Its authenticity may be a little doubtful, and it might be pronounced very doubtful were it not that Senator Dick is one of the lightest of all the feather heads in the senate, and this is characteristic of him:

The man who knows most about this is Jones of Nevada, and I think he is a fair man. He and I went to the senate at the same time, and were given seats together away down in the greenhorns' corner. One day when there was so much talk about Crown Point mine and the Comstock lode I said, "Jones, what is all this about? Is there any truth in it?" "Well," said Jones, "you are an old miner, let me show you what my mines are producing." And he did so for a month or so, and it was about $1,500 a day profits. Afterward he told me how they made fools of themselves. An agent of the Rothschilds came out, and they thought he was going to buy stock and put a large amount of money into the business, so they took him all through the mines and showed him what they contained and that the silver was there in exhaustless quantities. They toasted and treated him, and demonstrated to him for three months, and all at once he quietly went away without investing a dollar. Then they saw how they had done it. Immediately the anti-silver agitation began, and ended in its demonetization, no doubt through the influence of capitalists to whom they had been simple enough to show what they had.

THE KENTUCKY SENATOR

John S Williams, who has just been elected senator for Kentucky, is called by the Philadelphia Times "that jolly old party who goes by the name of Cerro Gordo Williams." The Times explains further:

Williams is not the kind of man that senators ought to be made of, but it is probable the average Kentuckian has about made up his mind that it is time something was done to get Williams out of the way. It is not too much to say that he has been something of a nuisance. He fought in the Mexican war, was a gallant soldier, as everybody is free to admit, and captured some cannon at Cerro Gordo which are now exhibited with pride in the Kentucky [illegible]. Ever since the close of that war, about thirty years ago, Williams has been trying to make a great man of himself by getting some position a good [illegible] for him. Every time there has been a convention to nominate a governor Williams has been around with his [illegible] and these same [illegible] nearly every legislature that has had a senator to elect. But this is the first time [illegible]

NOTES AND OPINIONS

Boston Traveller: The gist of the advice of the reformers is that the president should conciliate his enemies and resist the plans and thwart the wishes of his old friends.

New York Tribune: Is there a Republican party? [illegible] possible for a Republican president to [illegible] influence in defense of the most vital point of Republican policy.

Boston Herald: There is one thing our [illegible] mind—when there was an inflated currency it was the last that most [illegible] Another inflation [illegible] will be the last more than the first.

New York Sun: Energy, sagacity, pluck and enterprise are all that is wanting on the part of our industrial and trading classes to turn in this direction a much larger share of the wealth creating commerce of the world than we have heretofore enjoyed. They must not, however, sit still and wait for Congress to open new markets by treaty or otherwise.

The state of New York has reduced her debt in the past year $12,000,000, having the sinking funds with which to pay off that amount as it fell due. Her debt has steadily fallen from $52,000,000 in 1866 to $10,000,000 now, and will be entirely swept off within a few years. But the debt of the city of New York increases more rapidly than that of the state diminishes.

Boston Transcript: "Remember my grand maxims," said Richelieu, "First employ all methods to conciliate." "Failing these?" "All means to crush." There are those among the president's best friends who feel that he has about exhausted the first part of the programme in dealing with dissatisfied Republican politicians of the machine stripe, and that it is time for the crushing to begin.

Chicago Tribune: From all quarters comes the report of "an improved feeling," and a prospect of reconciliation. The talk of open hostilities and of driving the president to seek support from the Democratic party in congress has almost wholly ceased. Senator Edmunds' letter has happened opportunely, since it affords the extremists the chance of expressing their approval of the views therein set forth and of climbing down gracefully.

Springfield Republican: Of course nobody can blame the Chandler organs for desiring to let themselves down easy by representing the action of the convention to have been simply a mutual concession to secure party success. It was a "concession," however, that Chandler & Co are clearly reconciled to, the surprising state of things in the Granite State [illegible] on the same philosophical ground as was the Dutchman's wife. "Was she ready to die?" "Mein Gott, she had to be!"

The State Journal (Columbus, Ohio) speaks thus of a lot who are hanging around the legislature of that state: "Men are here as candidates who were candidates twenty years ago, never got an office, and never will, yet they come out every time and present their claims with the same vehemence as when their heads were as black as crows. The moss has pretty well enveloped their frames, but still they hanker after the flesh pots and emoluments incident to the changes of political parties."

PERSONAL AND GENERAL

Senator Patterson is not much better, but he is still able to draw his $13 a day.

"Old man not afraid to get married" is how the Brooklyn Union-Argus alludes to Mr Lord.

Of ninety-nine millionaires of Philadelphia, ex Gov. Asa Packer is the richest, being worth $12,000,000.

Mary Kyle Dallas, the story writer, has been made principal of a public school at Mianus, Conn.

Secretary Schurz says he has no time to resign while so many reforms remain to accomplish in the interior department.

A Georgia paper thus early announces its "grand purpose" of making General Robert Toombs the next governor of the state.

The daughter of Senator Blaine, who was severely injured by the accidental discharge of a pistol, has entirely recovered and is again at school.

The building improvement lists of Omaha for the year 1877 show that the sum of $600,000 has been thus expended, which is a larger amount than in any previous year in the history of that city.

Senator David Davis will learn in time that his adroit weaving of a silver thread among the gold will not lead him to the White House. As early as 1880 the silver affair will no longer be a delusion.

Mrs Chisholm, whose husband, son, and daughter were conciliated full of buckshot by the chivalry of Kemper county, has got a clerkship in the treasury department, so that her daily bread is safe till March 4, 1881. If the Democrats elect the next president, however, we suppose she will have to be sacrificed on the altar of conciliation.

They are talking of cutting down Mr Beecher's salary. The amount realized by the sale of pews is so much smaller than of old that it will be impossible to make both ends meet unless some reduction is made, and an impression is gaining ground that at $20,000 per annum the pastor's services are rated at considerably more than their market value.

The Rev Dr Fowler comes out personally in one of the Christian Advocates, of which he is editor, with the startling statement that if Christ made alcoholic wine he must be "put on trial not as a sot but as a moderate drinker who, according to the law of human nature, with so many million illustrations, was possibly saved from becoming an example for sots by being crucified in early manhood."

PRESS PITH

Worcester Press: Young men should pattern after pianos—be square, upright, grand.

Chicago Tribune: Patterson says: "I can lie here (his bed) and draw my $18 a day." Yes, and in the senate he can lie and draw exactly the same amount.

New York Herald: Sam Smith to his bookkeeper: "Has the new drummer got as much brass as the old one?" "Oh yes sir, he's one of the real old fashioned door knockers of our daddies."

Chicago Times: The Democrats believe in rotation in office. Having elected Tilden to one presidential term they are inclined to turn him out at the expiration thereof, and go for some one else.

Norristown Herald: A new song is entitled "Trust me, darling, I'll be true." That is what they all say. But don't trust him on a short acquaintance. The probabilities are that he has another wife in another town.

Boston Post: "Gentlemen of the jury," said a Worcester lawyer in the courthouse last week, "at the moment the policeman says he saw us in that house, which was but lately [illegible] I will prove that we were locked up drunk in the station house."

VOICE OF THE PRESS

IT IS IN FAVOR OF EXTENSION OF THE NORTHERN PACIFIC GRANT AND OPPOSES SENATOR MITCHELL'S BILL

Nearly all the principal newspapers of the country have published articles in favor of extension of time for the Northern Pacific railroad, and in opposition to the course taken by Senator Mitchell. Among these journals are the New York Times and Sun, the Boston Advertiser, the Chicago Times and Tribune, the St Paul Press, the Philadelphia Times and many others. It will be seen therefore that the course of THE OREGONIAN on this question, which a few petty and venal organs here declare is dictated solely by personal hostility to Mr Mitchell, is precisely the course pursued by the greatest and most respectable journals of the United States on this highly important matter, except that many of them push the argumentum ad hominem on Mr Mitchell far beyond anything which THE OREGONIAN admits into its columns. It studiously excludes, even in reproducing their articles, everything of this kind because it desires to show that this is strictly a public question of highest importance, and not in any degree a personal matter. It cannot be new, however, to most of our readers that Mr Mitchell is himself being discussed at this time all over the United States in connection with his bill. But this is not THE OREGONIAN's manner of dealing with this business. We reprint here from the Philadelphia Inquirer of the 11th inst a moderate and argumentative article on the subject, from which, however, we have found it necessary to eliminate certain severe expressions and personalities.

Some ten or twelve thousand people scattered through more than twenty states have devoted thirty millions of their money to the partial construction of the Northern Pacific railroad. They did this relying largely on the security furnished by the grant of public lands, and trusting perfectly that the nation would deal fairly, if not liberally, by those who should complete a thoroughfare preeminently important to the government itself. In common with every other interest, this enterprise has been crippled by the financial revulsion, and its completion has been thereby retarded, though not prevented. The unavoidable and unforeseen delay has consumed a part of the time named in the charter for the construction of the road. The company has, the past season, resumed the work of road building, and is now prepared to proceed with the completion of the line across the continent, provided the time therefor is extended a reasonable period beyond 1879, when the present chartered limit is supposed to expire. There ought not to be the slightest hesitation on the part of congress in granting this extension, and there probably would not be if the question could be promptly and squarely presented for the action of the two houses. It would seem that a clearer case of simple equity and fair play was never presented for the action of legislators.

But perhaps it would be too much to expect that the present necessity of the reorganized Northern Pacific Company, in the matter of time, should not be taken advantage of by designing persons in and out of congress, who have their own reasons for seeking to defeat the enterprise. Accordingly we find Mr. J H Mitchell, one of the Oregon senators, and chairman of the senate committee on railroads, presenting in congress and advocating a bill which he satirically entitles "A bill to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad," &c, but which ought to be called "A bill to prevent the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad, to confiscate a portion of its property and chartered rights, and to distribute the same among its rivals and the friends of Senator Mitchell." This remarkable measure, which Mr Mitchell has caused to be referred to the committee of which he is himself chairman, proposes, in brief, to destroy the ability of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to obtain the means for completing the road by rendering their land grant wholly useless as a basis of credit. This the bill proposes to accomplish by virtually returning the unearned portion of the grant to the government, and then providing that the government may sell the same piecemeal to actual settlers in tracts not exceeding 160 acres at two dollars and a half per acre, and devote the proceeds to paying interest on the construction bonds of the company, hereafter to be issued. Inasmuch as Mr Mitchell knows perfectly well that "construction bonds" could not be negotiated without the untrammeled land grant as part of the security therefor, and that cash sales of land by the government to actual settlers for the benefit of the company would not in five years cover the cost of building fifty miles of track, it is obvious that the Oregon senator's real aim is to adopt a sure plan how not to complete the northern transcontinental line of railroad.

But this thinly veiled design is plainly revealed in the latter part of the Mitchell bill, which provides, first, that some five million acres of the Northern Pacific railroad grant shall be wrested from that company and given to a mythical corporation called, by courtesy, the Portland, Salt Lake and South Pass Railroad Company; and second, that the Northern Pacific company, as one condition of its extension of time, shall go into partnership with this wholly imaginary P S L & S P Railroad Company, in building and running, in common, that part of the Northern Pacific through line extending from Portland, Oregon, to Umatilla, on the upper Columbia. In a word, Mr Mitchell and his associates in this movement appear to be engaged in a poorly disguised plot to permanently stop the Northern Pacific railroad where it now is, turn over its chartered privileges and its promising future to a mushroom rival to be controlled by Mitchell and his friends, who hope then to ally themselves with Mr Jay Gould and the Union Pacific in such way as to get a branch of the latter road built from Ogden to the Columbia valley—to the great profit of the new ring and the final triumph of monopoly in transcontinental commerce.

There is no possibility of the Mitchell bill becoming a law. The real danger is that its consideration in congress may so delay other and reasonable legislation respecting the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad as to imperil the future of the enterprise, and thus indirectly accomplish the real designs of the authors of the Mitchell measure. Timely exposure of the real character and animus of the present hostile movement ought to paralyze its power for mischief.

The Daily Oregonian.

TUESDAY MORNING, JAN. 29, 1878.

PROBABLY WILL BECOME A LAW.

It is now certain that the proposition to force on the country a ninety-two cent silver dollar, with intent to displace gold, will pass the senate as it has passed the house. Some weeks ago there seemed to be a certainty that the president would veto any bill of this nature; but there is not the same confidence now; nor indeed is there much reason to believe that the measure would get in either house the one-third necessary to sustain a veto. It is almost certain, therefore, that the bill will become a law. But it now seems likely to produce less mischief than was at first anticipated, because there is a growing confidence in financial centers at the east that, in spite of this act, business, which has virtually reached a gold basis, can be kept there. Should this prove true, the measure will recoil on those who have been clamoring for it. Great houses will do business strictly on a gold basis; smaller establishments and retail dealers which sell for silver will charge such prices as will protect them against loss, and even enable them to make a profit above the silver discount; and consumers, including all the poorer classes, will be obliged to pay the premium on the transactions. This will be an inevitable result, because the great houses, representing enormous capital, will be able to take such measures as will protect themselves against loss, and the people will be obliged to submit to the shave on the money which circulates among them. An advance of retail prices is all that is necessary to fix the cost on consumers. Cheap money, instead of protecting the people, is thus the most insidious and perfect device ever employed for robbing them.

But a general craze prevails in congress and in certain parts of the country, and it must have its way. Every hobby runs its course in an appointed time; and this delusion, being part of the fatuous idea now abroad that wealth is created by law instead of by labor, can be got rid of only by waiting till it expires by its own own law of limitation. Every idea entertained by the silver people in relation to the reasons which led to demonetization of silver five years ago is absolutely false. The act was not put through congress secretly, but after several years of discussion through the financial newspapers and nearly three years of examination by the committees of congress. Silver was not demonetized because it was cheap and offered the people a readier means of paying their debts, but for precisely the opposite reason. At that time the silver dollar was three or four per cent. above par, and the dearer metal was demonetized. The people did not want to pay their debts in that dearer money. Some time after the silver dollar was dropped from our list of coins the metal began to depreciate. Owing to new discoveries of silver, which threw on the market enormous quantities of the metal, and to demonetization by the principal countries of Europe, its fall was rapid; and now, just because it has become cheap and offers a means of scaling debts, there is loud demand for its restoration. If silver were still the same price it was five years ago, or if it were supposed that remonetization would bring it back to that price, the inflationists and repudiators would want none of it. The very same influence that clamored for "greenbacks for bonds" in 1868 now demands silver. But the country has made progress toward a sound financial basis, and men like Bland and Matthews will probably be able to do less mischief than might once have been effected by them.

A LAME METHOD.

The letter recently written by Senator Edmunds on civil service policy, with a view of restoring harmony between the president and certain senators, is criticised with severity by those journals which insist on substantial methods of reform. The central idea of Mr. Edmunds' letter was that members of congress should voluntarily abstain from seeking appointments for friends; and he would supplement this, as the New York Times expresses it, "with a well-intended but foggy measure of legislation which he hopes would make office-holders feel independent of members of congress." Now it is certain that the office broker in either branch of congress would approve without qualification any undefined recommendations which would still leave the power to dictate appointments in his hands. The pledge of abstinence would have no effect whatever on the average congressman. A Washington letter recalls what Senator Trumbull years ago tried to do in this matter, and contrasts the effort of Senator Edmunds with it. Mr. Trumbull embodied his propositions in a bill, and frequently urged its passage. It was absolutely prohibitory upon members of congress, against whom penalties were provided for voluntarily soliciting or recommending the appointment of any person to a civil office.

This suggestion, it is well observed, strikes at the very root of a long-standing abuse. If members of congress would voluntarily withdraw from the solicitation for appointments, the executive would be absolutely free, and, no doubt, in many cases might seek the information which congressmen could give with advantage to the service and to the party. But there would be an end of purely partisan and personal manipulation of the civil service appointments, and the link between the civil service and party politics would be completely severed. The president's civil service order of last spring strikes at the same point, indirectly, by removing, if strictly enforced, the motive that congressmen now have for seeking office in behalf of their friends and supporters, because officers whose appointment they might secure would be disqualified from conducting their political affairs. If Mr. Trumbull was unable to secure any voters for his bill, it can be easily believed that not many voluntary subscribers are likely to be obtained for Senator Edmunds' pledge of abstinence. The law would have this recommendation over the pledge, that it would exclude the successors of the present congress from enjoyment of privileges which the pledge requires them to deny to themselves.

INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The recommendations which Indian Inspector Watkins has made for consolidation of Indian reservations in Oregon and Washington are of great importance. If carried out, the plan will be of the highest value to the country. The reservations as now existing can be so readjusted as to accommodate the country far better than now, without incommoding or injuring the Indians in any way whatever. They are not using these lands, except to a very limited extent. Removal of the Indians of Umatilla and Warm Springs to Yakima reservation, and consolidation of all the Oregon coast Indians at Grand Ronde or Siletz would effect an arrangement for Oregon that would be acceptable; while the suggestions made as to consolidation of the various bands in Washington territory at a few places would give material relief from the complicated reservation system that exists there. Sooner or later some such readjustment must be made; and the sooner the better.

Horace Davis, who represents the San Francisco district in congress, is a miller and a merchant who deals in flour. He is making efforts at Washington to secure the enactment of a law which shall restrict Chinese immigration. The six companies, which have been numbered among the large customers of Mr. Davis, have notified him that unless he change his course in congress they will withdraw their patronage from his mills. It is stated that Mr. Davis' views are not merely those of a political candidate, but have been entertained by him for many years; that as long ago as 1856, as correspondent of the New York Tribune at San Francisco, he declared that it would ultimately be found that the evils of Mongolian presence must be far more than the good their labor could bring; and his opinions were based mainly on the fact that the Chinese are non-assimilative in character, that they live meanly, and that thereby they can work so cheaply as to lower and degrade the whole framework of society. It was bad advice that led the six companies to make their attack on the business of Mr. Davis. In the midst of the ferment now prevailing in San Francisco, it is likely to make him the lion of the hour.

The Globe-Democrat of St. Louis has been crowded with column after column of the great religious controversy. In answer to one preacher who complained that his italics were disregarded, it informs him that his communication was cut into forty parts or "takes" for as many typesetters, while there were only three italic cases, and to suppress the natural, if not justifiable, profanity arising from the situation, the order was given to "disregard italics." In its protest that it takes his occasion to make against the habit which many writers have of trying to give strength to a weak style by profuse use of italics, the Globe-Democrat is entitled to the support of the editorial profession generally. It says: "It is by no means a proof of the strength of an article to see the smoothness and regularity of its appearance thus destroyed and defaced. Perhaps it would not be overstating the case to say that italics bear the same relation to writing that profanity does to speech: oaths are the italics of the ignorant in conversation; and italics are the oaths of the weak in writing."

Nast has been making another hard hit. He draws a picture of a pawn shop with Stanley Matthews as "mine uncle." On a counter lies a watch which the proprietor who does business under the three brass balls is passing over to the pawner. (Uncle Matthews log.): "Yes, Mr. Bloated Bondholder, you gave me a gold watch and chain, but now I can return you a silver one." It is a very apt illustration. Many hundreds of millions of bonds now outstanding were sold for gold coin by the government, and now Pinchbeck Matthews and his set propose to redeem them with silver. The case of the man who borrowed a gold watch and proposed to return a silver one for it is exactly in point.

In response to frequent assertions that the banking interests of the east are controlled by "bloated bondholders" the statement is made from official sources that in New England bank stock is so well distributed that the average holding is only about $2,100, and in the middle states only $3,100, while the average in the west is $4,800, and in the Pacific states and territories, $8,300.

There is a project on foot to lay a great line of pipe from the Pennsylvania oil regions to Baltimore. Pennsylvania is alarmed somewhat at this proposition to transport her petrolium, one of the most valuable staples of the commonwealth, by means of pipes to the metropolis of a neighboring state; and the legislature is besought not to grant a charter for it.

When the New York Sun of the 12th stated in very plain terms that Mr. Mitchell could not get his bill through, and that "he might just as well pause before he butts against the stone wall," it seems to have interpreted very correctly what the action of the committees would be.

Congress is about to authorize a silver dollar weighing 412½ grains. But in order to be worth a dollar it should contain about 445 grains. The fact about silver is that in the present state of its market it is not suitable for money except to a limited extent for subsidiary coin.

The Yreka Journal says that during the recent storms three feet of snow fell at Strawberry valley and eight or nine feet on Scott's mountain. High water in Pitt river prevented the ferry on the mail route from running for some days.

The Alta calls the election of Mr. Bones in Alameda, a workingmen's candidate for the state senate, a "political sensation;" but it claims that as a political movement the workingmen's party cannot obtain permanent success.

A discovery has been made by the Standard. At last it finds that "the passage of railroad bills does not build roads." It begins finally to appreciate the main objection we have urged against the Mitchell-Grover bill.

A California paper says that Voorhees' recent speech on finances bears a curious resemblance to the rhodomontade of the San Francisco agitators.

A BUSINESS CHANCE.

THE PROPRIETOR, MRS. G. H. CLARKE, HAS determined upon retiring from business, and therefore offers for sale her elegant MILLINERY ESTABLISHMENT, located on Washington street. One of the best opportunities that has been offered in this city for a number of years is open to any one who would like to purchase. The business has been long established and enjoys an enviable reputation in its line. It possesses the very best classes as its customers and during the nine years of its existence has always enjoyed the fullest share of public patronage, and were it not for the most substantial reasons it would not be for sale. A rare opportunity that is seldom offered is thereby open to one who would take up the business and continue it as it stands, without necessitating any losses through delays of transfers. The business will be disposed of upon the most reasonable terms, including good will, stock and fixtures, and a bargain is offered the purchaser in every particular. It is desirable that parties contemplating purchase will apply immediately, as it has been determined upon to close it out at once without delay. It is proposed to sell it and it must be done. For terms and particulars apply at the store. MRS. G. H. CLARKE.

CITY

A VILLAINOUS OUTRAGE.—We are informed of a very mysterious and at the same time very cruel and criminal act which was committed near Milwaukie yesterday morning between 8 and 9 o clock As the little son of Mr S H Derr who lives in the suburbs of the town was on his way to school and when crossing the creek just above the town he met a man who wore heavy black whiskers a long brown overcoat and had his face partially covered with a mask The lad who is only twelve years of age was frightened at the appearance of the man and started to run The man pursued the scared boy and overtook him tied his hands and dragged him about 20 yards into the timber Here the villain began tying the boy to a tree in the meantime having choked him so that he was unable to make much of an outcry However as the boy was being tied he managed to scream pretty loudly and his persecutor becoming afraid perhaps that someone might be in hearing left him and fled before the boy was securely tied The lad by some means loosed himself and ran home falling insensible from terror and exhaustion at his father s door His tongue was swollen so that it protruded from his mouth the lacerations on his body and his general appearance indicated the suffering mental and physical which he had undergone By use of restoratives he however recovered consciousness and was able to give imperfect description of his tormentor, which is furnished above What the motive for such a deed was or by whom committed the parents of the lad and the citizens of Milwaukie are utterly unable to tell There is a good deal of just indignation felt in regard to the outrage, and could the villainous perpetrator have been discovered his treatment would doubtless have been severe but could hardly have been more so than the wretch deserves Efforts will be made to ferret the matter out and bring the guilty dastard to justice

LUCKY QUEEN MINE.—At the annual meeting of the Lucky Queen mining company held in Roseburg on the 26th instant W R Willis, D. A Levens, S F Chadwick W B Royal, J. Brandt Jr, R Mallory and F B Smith were elected directors W R Willis was elected president and W F Hodley secretary Director Royal who has lately had supervision of the Lucky Queen mill and mine, reports that indications of an important nature have been recently found in the 100 foot level, the walls of the ledge being well defined and five feet apart with an ore body 28 inches in thickness In drifting a distance of 15 feet, a vein of silver bearing quartz adjoining the west wall of the ledge increased in thickness from one to six inches in that distance, from which small pieces of ruby silver were extracted being the first ore of this character taken from the mine Assays of the ore made in the presence of the directors give the following results The main vein of quartz produced from $12 to $48 per ton in gold and silver, the narrow seam of silver bearing quartz gave a result of $497 64 per ton in silver, the pieces of ruby silver assaying $6,873 46 per ton in silver.

NAVAL COMBAT.—Yesterday afternoon two jolly sons of Neptune accompanied by the redoubtable Jim Turk, bearing a long handled shovel, were seen to emerge from a low dive down First street Rushing into the middle of the street, Jim, waving his wand soon formed a ring and the tars doffing their jackets, immediately proceeded to pummel each other after the most approved style of the prize ring At the first round the smaller and more plucky of the two went down amid the shouts of the bystanders But the lilliputian rose up bravely, and encouraged by the Ottoman, who waved his shovel and declared there should be fair play and sailors rights, he advanced more cautiously, and finally by a dexterous thrust beneath the belt caused his huge adversary to bite the dirt All parties seeming to have had satisfaction they marched off proudly down the street, muddier if not bloodier then followed by the master of ceremonies, brandishing his baton, No arrests.

ANNIVERSARY EXERCISES.—One hundred and forty one years ago to-day, Thomas Paine the noted free thinker and the author of the "Age of Reason," a work which has attained a notoriety almost world wide first saw the light of day. Thomas Paine was born at Thetford, County of Norfolk, England, Jan 29, 1737, and died in New York, June 8 1809 at the advanced age of 72 years The recurrence of the 141st anniversary of the birth of this remarkable man, will be appropriately observed at Turn Halle this evening by the Liberal Association of Portland An oration will be delivered by Prof Cheney following which will be a recitation by Mrs H S Lake reading by Dr. J. B Pilkington, speaking (in German) by Dr J. Folkmann, and singing by the singing section of the Turn Verein The doors will open at 7 30 P M, exercises will commence at 8 o clock A ball will conclude the exercises of the evening

"INTEMPERANCE AND EXPOSURE."—On being notified of the sudden and somewhat suspicious death of the fallen woman Mrs Mary E Hughes, of whom mention was made in yesterday's issue, coroner DeLinn summoned the following persons to serve as jurors George C Sears, W H Anderson, D H Stearns, D W Prentice, H Brenner and F Gallagher A number of witnesses were examined during the investigation and an autopsy held by Dr C C Strong No hing was discovered which tended in the least to confirm suspicions that death was attributable to foul means The jury, after mature deliberation, returned a verdict that Mrs Mary E Hughes came to her death from intemperance and exposure combined Being entirely without means the remains were buried at the expense of the county

JOSEPH AND HIS BAND.—An exchange says "The Nez Perces, numbering 87 braves 184 squaws, 78 boys and 69 girls, all the tribe except the 80 warriors and 190 women and children that White Bird took across the line are camped on the race course at Leavenworth Kansas, having the run of the country near by. Rations are issued to them. They have dug a hole forty feet in diameter beside the Missouri river, where, having previously warmed the water by casting heated stones into it, they bathe daily no matter how cold the weather Chief Joseph wants to be sent back to his old reservation and take his tribe with him.

WHERE WAS THE FIRE.—Sunday evening about 6 o'clock while the rain and windstorm were fiercely raging a light was plainly visible in the northern heavens At first the light was quite small but it seemed to shoot up suddenly until the whole sky in that direction was illuminated Very few persons appeared to notice the light as the storm beat with such pitiless vehemence that the streets were almost deserted From appearances the fire could have been but a few miles below the city Inquiries made yesterday failed to obtain any information as to the existence extent or whereabouts of the fire

MAXIMUM VELOCITY.—Although not accompanied by disaster or damage [illegible] note the velocity acquired by the heavy gale which prevailed here Sunday afternoon and evening was something unusual Observations taken at the signal office in this city during the continuance of the wind show that its maximum velocity was [illegible] miles per hour For the space of several hours the average velocity was [illegible] speed may not [illegible] in countries exposed to heavy [illegible] gales, but it is unusual for Oregon

ANNUAL MEETING.—On Saturday evening at 7 30 P M the annual meeting of the directors and members of the Library Association of Portland will be held in the library rooms where the president [illegible] report and other business of the [illegible] transacted

A PLEASANT PARTY.—We had a pleasant call from one of our wholesale merchants who has just returned from a business trip through the valley and he informed us that he enjoyed in company with the jolly citizens of Junction City on the evening of Jan 23d one of the best masquerade balls of the season He says that he has attended many pleasant balls of this character in larger cities than Portland and he is free to say the pleasant affair at Junction could not be surmounted by any of them The grand success of this whole affair is wholly due to the efficient management of Mr Ira Brasfield and another gentleman whose name he was unable to learn He also informs us that another pleasant party of this sort is to come off on the 4th of next month at Harrisburg

RELIGIOUS INTEREST.—We understand that there is a marked increase in religious interest in the series of meetings held in the M E Church in East Portland Last Sunday evening the ordinance of baptism was administered to thirteen persons Thus far over twenty persons have professed the Christian faith and attached themselves to the church Meetings will be held nightly the present week

AMUSEMENTS.

PINK DOMINOES.—This play was produced last evening at New Market Theater to a full house To say that the piece went off in good style and was most delightfully appreciated by the audience, would be but simple truth and simple justice to those who took part in the play Throughout it was a [illegible] mirth provoking and at times the merriment was very demonstrative fairly making the [illegible] Mr Wallace as Joseph Stubbs was excessively funny—in fact he made a most decided hit His impersonation of the gay old rooster out on a lark was faultless [illegible] costume and acting His acting in [illegible] act when he gets intoxicated and in the [illegible] closing act when he attempts to explain matters away to his wife was [illegible] and [illegible] Mr Ward as Charles Greythorne that model of a husband [illegible] was in excellent [illegible] As Sir Percy Wagstaff Mr Wade was very clever acting the character in a [illegible] manner The parts of Lady Maggie Wagstaff personated by Miss Harrietta Osborne and of Mrs Chas Greythorne by Miss Lulu Wall could not have been entrusted to more competent hands these ladies playing their respective roles for all that they were worth Miss Frengove as Mrs Jos Stubbs the innocent and unsuspecting old lady dressed the part in good taste and acted it quite acceptably Miss Rodgers as Rebecca the servant girl who makes more than half the trouble personated the character passibly Had that young lady have thrown a little more sprightliness and vivacity into the part its effects would have been greatly heightened Mr Imhaus as that boy Harry was really very clever and made the part comical in the extreme particularly when he attempts to help the old gentleman out of the dilemma Mr Howard as Brisket the waiter made the part all that the dramatist intended which is certainly a compliment not undeserved That charming and piquant little lady Mrs Imhaus appeared most advantageously as Miss Barron Pink Dominoes to night Don t fail to see it Come with the expectation of enjoying a pleasant evening and you will not be disappointed

LETTER FROM GEN. HOWARD.

The following letter will require no explanation

HEADQUARTERS DEPT OF THE COLUMBIA
PORTLAND Jan 28 1878

Mr John P Falmer—DEAR SIR Your letter of January 19th is just received,

My dispatch stating that the four levers of Camas Prairie (I meant those actually engaged in the murder) were all killed was based on information furnished me from time to time by the scouts and interpreters

A direct report from some hostiles brought me at what are called Camas Meadows that all the murderers were dead but one After the surrender at least three times and from two different interpreters it was stated to me that all said the murderers were dead

When the name of Mox Mox appeared I asked at once if he were the man engaged in the Salmon River murders and was told distinctly by one of the gentlemen from your part of the country that this was not the Mox Mox referred to Charley s first murder was some years ago He shot Mr Cowan in the National Park as Mr Oldham testified As soon as I learned that the murderer Charley called sometimes Lapwai Charley was among the prisoners I called Gen Miles attention to him and advised his arrest as soon as it could be done after he (Miles) had gathered in as many as he could of those who had escaped from his battlefield I thought at the time that the Indians might be giving out this report to shield the guiltiest but I supposed then that the remnant of the hostiles would be returned to this department and that the citizens would be able to identify the murderers if there were any alive In fact I did not think there was much distinction in the guilt of the Indians who fought us because their actions subsequent to the murders and outrages in effect endorsed the vile conduct of the criminals

Of course I had no desire whatever to shield the most guilty of these Indians, on the contrary, nothing would have suited me better than to have them brought to trial and punishment I simply gave the report according to the information I then had

You are at liberty to do as you like with this letter Very respectfully, yours,
(Signed) O O HOWARD

STEAMER ANCON
ASTORIA Sunday Jan 27 1878

Capt a Debney and Officers of the Ancon So many expressions of admiration and hearty commendation of the manner in which you have managed the steamer Ancon during what we consider to have been a most perilous passage have been repeated from mouth to mouth among the passengers that we have considered it not inappropriate to put our feeling into form and convey to you our deep appreciation not only of the admirable seamanship which you have displayed but of your unvarying courtesy and constant efforts for the comfort of your fellow passengers.

It is not saying too much that we believe we owe our lives and safety to the coolness and good management displayed during the terrible crisis passed through on the Columbia river bar and the still more terrifying gale on the night of the 25th While conveying to you our grateful thanks we wish further to express our confidence in your ability and trustworthiness and most heartily commend you and the good ship Ancon which you so well command to the traveling public Please accept our kind regards and heartfelt thanks

FROM WASHINGTON COUNTY

The smallpox scare has subsided

The rains of Saturday and Sunday raised the Tualatin river several feet and its current goes surging along at the rate of five miles per hour

A great deal of turnpiking was done in Washington county this year and since the late rains the roads look like [illegible] mortar troughs

Although separated by mud coated roads which seem to have been made by Providence as a training school for patience the good people of Washington county are not dead to the pleasures of social intercourse and parties are popular and of frequent occurrence A company of between 40 and 50 ladies and gentlemen assembled at the residence of Mr J N Clement near Cedar Mill on the Harris ford road on the evening of the 25th and participated in a [illegible] and candy pulling. It was a sort of a [illegible] and everybody participating had a royal good time Late in the evening the hostess provided good cheer in abundance to which justice most ample was accorded The merriment did not cease until near morning

The district school at Beaverton Washington county which for several months past has been conducted by Mr Theophilus C Humphreys of this city closed on the 25th and an exhibition was given in the evening at the church building The exercises consisted of essays declamations and the usual school exercises The smaller children in beautiful costumes of red white and blue sang several Kindergarten songs in excellent taste and were encored and re encored most heartily Very excellent vocal and instrumental music was furnished at intervals during the evening by Mrs and Miss Hamilton and Mr Samuel Raker of Beaverton and Miss Allen late of the east Taken altogether the entertainment was most creditable to pupils and teacher and a generous public which sustains them

RADICAL CURE
FOR CATARRH

INSTANTLY relieves and permanently cures this loathsome disease in all its varying stages It possesses the soothing and healing properties of plants herbs and barks in their essential form free from every fibrous contamination and in this respect differs from every other known remedy In one short year it has found its way from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and wherever known has become the standard remedy for the treatment of Catarrh The proprietors have been waited upon by gentlemen of national reputation who have been cured by this remedy and who have, at considerable expense and personal trouble spread the good news throughout the circles in which they move When you hear a wealthy gentleman of intelligence and refinement say I owe my life to Sanford s Radical Cure you may feel assured that it is an article of great value and worthy to be classed among the standard medical specifics of the day

IMPORTANT LETTER
From a Distinguished Physician.

NO single disease has entailed more suffering or hastened the breaking up of the constitution than Catarrh The sense of smell of taste of sight of hearing the human voice the mind one or more and sometimes all yield to its destructive influence The poison it distributes throughout the system attacks every vital force and breaks up the most robust of constitutions Ignored because but little understood by most physicians impotently assailed by quacks and charlatans those suffering from it have little hope to be relieved of it this side of the grave It is time then that the popular treatment of this terrible disease by remedies within the reach of all passed into hands at once competent and trustworthy The new and hitherto untried method adopted by Dr Sanford in the preparation of his RADICAL CURE has won my hearty approval I believe it likely to succeed when all the usual remedies fail because it strikes at the root of the disease viz the acidified blood while it heals the ulcerated membrane by direct application to the nasal passages Its action is based on certain fixed rules and unless the vital forces are too far exhausted must in the great majority of cases effect a cure

TUESDAY MORNING JAN 29 1878

THEY ARE ALWAYS AT THE GATE

They are always at the gate,
Are the poor
And at early morn at thy door
Come these beings desolate
Seeking more
Freely as God gives to you
Give the poor
Trust Him for He shall restore
All you give to them and more
Never close to them thy door
To the poor

MARGARET

From Temple Bar

A corridor at [illegible] of a [illegible] rambling house in the [illegible] of England a barred window and a closed door In the passage a fair haired girl, with [illegible] indescribable pity in her dove like eyes kneeling upon the boards and pushing biscuits and sweetmeats underneath the [illegible] door which disappeared as fast as they were placed there showing that there were [illegible] hands to seize them or the other side Within another girl as young as the [illegible] not twenty certain y—groveling on the floor like a wild beast, with dark disheveled hair almost hiding the spark of insanity that desecrated her glorious eyes, and devouring the precious morsels that her visitor placed within her reach with the avidity of a hungry child The room in which she crouched was not comfortless but had evidently been prepared for the reception of such inmates and the carefully guarded window and cushioned walls showed that the mansion in which it was situated was occupied by one who made it the business of his life to receive such unfortunates into his professional care. In plain words, a private lunatic asylum

"My poor Leah!" whispered the fair haired girl on the outside, "do you know that I am here, and that I love you?"

The soft, clear voice was not unheard for Leah raised her head for a moment and sat listening, with the dark cloud of tangled hair thrown back from the low forehead and deeply shaded eyebrows. But the look of attention passed away almost as rapidly as it had come, and in another moment her head was down again on the floor, and the softly set lips, that seemed only to shape love's whispers, murmured stupidly and hungrily, "More more!"

"I am going now," said the soft voice again, "but I will come and see you this evening with the nurse. Do you hear? Do you understand?"

There was nothing but an inarticulate murmur in reply, though she listened in vain, and the fair haired girl rose with a sigh from her knees, and passed from the desolate corridor into the more habitable and cheerful part of the house in which the physician and his family lived having learned from habit to look lightly on the empty human shrines of reason that were sheltered beneath the same roof.

"She is so beautiful said the girl to herself as she went down the staircase I hope God does not let her know what she is now, or she would die, as I should do"

"My dear Margaret, said her mother looking up as her eldest child entered the room "I do hope you have not been among the patients again?"

"I have only been to see poor Leah said Margaret Fenwick, in the same soft voice which was one of her greatest charms I must do that, you know, if it makes her less unhappy."

"Let the child alone" said Dr Fenwick "She will do herself no harm if she does nobody else any good. But you did not work upon Brooker's feelings to give you the key I hope, Madge? The door was locked, of course?"

"I talked to her through the door, that was all," answered Margaret, simply "Papa, do you think she will ever be like other people again? It was only last week she was sitting here with us all, and I was teaching her to play the accompaniment to her songs"

"I know all that" said the physician, "but she is suffering from an acute attack of dementia now. She is very young and may get completely over it, but then she will be always liable to a relapse. A sudden trouble would do it at any time."

"And she has money, too!" sighed Mrs Fenwick, half enviously, as if it was a sin that so much good material for happiness should be wasted. "Didn't you say she had money?"

"Thirty thousand pounds, I believe," said her husband dryly, "but I think there are thirty thousand good reasons why nobody should envy her"

It is five years since Margaret Fenwick knelt at the corridor door whispering soft words of love and sympathy to the unhappy girl inside. She is living in London with her mother now, for Dr. Fenwick has been dead some time, and the establishment at Harewood has been broken up The gentle charm of her loveliness is still in its first flower and as she lingers over the letter which is in her hand, the clear light of happiness is irradiating her brow and laughing back from the soft sweet eyes. The words that a man writes to his promised wife could be answered in no more fitting way

My dearest child,—I have got all the way to Wales safely, and the whole family is collected here under the paternal roof I need n't say that one thing is wanting to me, and that I hope will soon be supplied, for of course you will come down and spend Christmas with us. My father and mother both want words to express their anxiety to see you and receive you as a daughter Write and say how soon you can come.

We are very quiet here, but there are one or two new people in the village. A Mrs Fourier has taken the White House, and her daughter is a regular acquisition. The old lady is not much but Leah Fourier plays and sings divinely and is unusually good looking in the bargain The girls are mad about her.

You can see how hard up I am for anything to tell you when I am forced to write about strangers. I suppose you would get tired of it if I were to keep on telling you that I love you, but I have very few other ideas in my head just now at any one time. Besides, isn't it much pleasanter to tell it with your dear hand in mine? Your own

ARTHUR ASHTON

"Leah Fourier!" repeated Margaret to herself, dreamily. "I hope she won't remember me. I wonder whether mad people recollect anything that has passed when they are well? That would be the most wretched part of it all!"

Leah Fourier is singing Si tu savais and Arthur Ashton is leaning over the piano, looking into her magical eyes with an expression—well, which would mean a good deal with some men, but which is merely a graceful courtesy, Margaret tries to believe, with Arthur Ashton. She has been at Llwyn-y-mawr a fortnight, and has found Leah Fourier almost as constant an inmate of the house as herself. But then, as Arthur said, the girls are mad about her, and there certainly is an enchantment somewhere in her glowing face before which few are able to stand Bien sur, tu m'aimerais!' she sings, and Margaret knows that the words would sound cold and passionless from her own lips in comparison Is it wonderful that there should be a response in Arthur Ashton's eyes?

The song is ended, and Margaret Fenwick's fiance strolls after the singer into the conservatory

"If I were you, Margaret I should go after them, really" said Arthur's eldest sister half laughing. "Leah would flirt with the footman, I believe, if there was nobody else in the way. It was just the same when poor Charlie was at home"

Margaret tries to smile and to keep her wistful eyes turned away from the conservatory door, but she cannot help speculating a little as to the difference between poor Charlie and his brother As to Leah herself she can hardly form a calm rational opinion so different is this Leah from the girl with the wild eyes, whose poor uncertain fingers she had held to find their old familiar places on the piano at Harewood five years ago. She feels rather than knows that the past is not all a blank in Miss Fourier's brain but no word of recognition has passed between the girls and it is plain at any rate that nothing of that dreadful episode in Leah's life is suspected by the Ashtons To Margaret herself as she looks on the [illegible] beauty it seems as if [illegible] be nothing but a dream [illegible] a pain to her to think [illegible] pity in those by go[illegible]

Ten minutes—a [illegible] slowly by and Leah [illegible] drawing room [illegible] under [illegible] half slumber [illegible] her eyes [illegible] enough to [illegible] Margaret [illegible] [illegible] taken [illegible]

unnecessary to [illegible] It is almost a relief to her to remember that this is her last evening with the Ashtons and that the next day Arthur is to take her back to London Leah Fourier may take all the footmen in Wales into the conservatory with her then if she chooses

Nevertheless the chill comes back to her heart more unmistakably than ever next [illegible] for Leah Fourier and the conservatory [illegible] Arthur Ashton are all [illegible] [illegible] could take [illegible] weeks holiday [illegible] her and she [illegible] be [illegible] days [illegible] of [illegible] her home So their good bye was [illegible] little Welsh [illegible] something full out of [illegible] that it was a bit of maiden hair fern It was a [illegible] stranger [illegible] then [illegible]

[illegible] which [illegible] heart and then [illegible] that she has been [illegible] enough unselfish enough to forgive him and a[illegible] of course that he can never forgive himself Margaret knows now what answer he made to Leah's song and wonders if there is anything left for her in the world for it is all made up of [illegible] tears The [illegible] that her father had said that there were 30,000 reasons why no one should envy Leah Fourier

Well Leah is his body and soul [illegible] and all if he chooses to take her and Margaret wonders whether the first will make up to him for all others Would he choose it he knew of the corridor of Harewood and had seen the lips he loved closing themselves with sweetmeats that soft compassionate hands thrust by stealth within their reach? She puts away the thought from her with a shudder calling upon God not to tempt her to come between him and his happiness If it can all be hidden from him it would be a sin for her of all women in the world to say a word which might dash the cup from his lips She would drink her own cup instead and try to sweeten it by the thought that the man she loved was happy with the girl for whom she loved had once felt so divine a pity

The months go quickly enough by now that Margaret no longer counts how many there are between the seed and blossom of her happiness, and she knows that Arthur Ashton must have brought his bride back with him by this time to his London home Does she sing 'Si tu savais' to him now, Margaret wonders or does each know the intensity of the other's love by heart and find it sufficient? Margaret shudders as she remembers that there is still a secret hidden from Arthur Ashton in Leah's mysterious eyes—a secret which she alone can read and would give half her life to be able to forget Would it ever happen that he should come to hate and curse her for having hidden it from him to revenge herself?

That she is revenged God knows how unwillingly Margaret sees the first time she holds Arthur Ashton's hand in hers again He has written to ask her if he may come to her and satisfy himself of her forgiveness and her love is dead enough in her heart for her to be able to tell him "yes" She has even ceased to wonder at the dreariness of her own life, and is vaguely conscious as he takes her hand of the same pity for him and the woman who had supplanted her that filled her heart as she went down the staircase at Harewood, leaving the cold corridor and the locked door behind her

"You have found out how little I was worthy of your regret?" he says, forcing an uneasy laugh, as he sees the old quiver he remembers in her lips is there no longer

"No, not that," answered Margaret, simply, "but it is quite true that I regret nothing, nothing, at least, that—" She stops, knowing that it is too late to tell him now what she does regret, and what she tries to persuade herself she is mistaken in regretting "You must be very happy—you are happy are you not?" she asked anxiously

"How long do you expect a bridegroom's happiness to last?" he asked in reply with an affectation of levity that tells Margaret she has been sacrificed in vain "Leah has been talking of coming to see you for the last month, do you know?"

"She is very beautiful" said Margaret irrelevantly "Is she quite well?"

"Well? Of course she is," he answered in not quite so even a voice. "Why should she not be well?"

Margaret's heart turns sick with the horrible apprehension that he has already learned to suspect a reason why "I only mean that I should be very glad to see her" she answers in what she strives to make her natural voice. "Will you tell her so for me?"

"You knew her before the time you came to stay with us did you not?" he asks looking at her with a keen inquiring glance "Why did you never tell me of that?"

"Yes that is, I met her years ago," answers Margaret hesitating "I did not think she remembered me, but I knew her again as soon as I saw her"

"Did you ever quarrel?" the bridegroom asks a little puzzled by her manner

"Oh, no," replies Margaret with a shudder thinking of the crouching figure and the greedy clutching hands that she had stolen up the long corridor to soothe and content "But she was always a strange girl and I never understood her quite" she added rather lamely

"Yes—strange—that is the word, is it not?" he says eagerly "She is nervous and depressed sometimes you know but that is nothing. She used to be that—that is what you mean is it not?"

It goes to Margaret's heart to see the wistful look with which he waits for her answer striving to put away from his thoughts the awful fear which she knows has already overshadowed his life.

"I think she was always nervous" she answers, wishing that she dared say something to comfort him, if she could not do so without a lie. "But of course, now that she is happy, there is nothing to be anxious about in that"

She does not offer to visit the bride herself, knowing what the sight of her must recall to Leah's mind, and not in truth believing that her presence would be welcome, whatever Mrs Ashton might say to her husband of her wish to see Margaret Fenwick again

"Tell her how glad I shall be if she likes to come" she says earnestly when Arthur Ashton takes her hand in his again to say good-bye

"Yes I will tell her," he answers but all the unreal cheerfulness has died out from his voice "It will do her good to have a friend like you—some woman to whom she can talk"

Margaret does not answer for the tears are filling her eyes but it needs no words to tell Arthur Ashton the heart he had thrown away is large enough for what he asks of it

The months go by, but Leah Ashton still only talks of coming to see the girl whose place in life she has taken from her so that Christmas comes around again without Margaret having seen her rival since the evening on which Leah came out of the conservatory with the spray of maiden hair in her hand There is a reason why Mrs Ashton should stay in her own house now and Margaret is not surprised to see in the paper one day that Arthur Ashton has another cause for being very happy She has almost persuaded herself that he may be so by this time and writes to tell him of her hope with her dear love to his wife. She did not think that such a letter required any immediate acknowledgment and opens his reply anxiously hearing that it has been brought by a special messenger

Come if you can, at once—she is asking for you God have mercy upon me A A

He is waiting for her at the door as she drives up and even in the gaslight she can see upon his brow an awful dread that his prayer will not be heard

"Are you not afraid to see her?"

Margaret puts her hand in his by way of reply and [illegible] very touch seems to give him courage

"She is not quite herself you know—not sensible I mean—but the doctors say that it [illegible] And your name has been [illegible] all day she will be calmer when she sees you will she not?"

[illegible]

It is so dark and miserable, Margaret but I will be quiet if you stay Make them let you stay I pray you hear

The weak voice rises almost to a scream and Margaret tries in vain to soothe it

"Yes dear Leah I am Margaret Dear Leah you know that I love you Oh my poor darling you know that I love you

The surgeon who is standing opposite Margaret takes her hand solemnly as she raises her eyes to [illegible] [illegible] The dark tangled hair falls over [illegible] [illegible] and Margaret does not know [illegible] that it is [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] the [illegible] financial [illegible] money matters [illegible] loans [illegible] Their [illegible] the condition of comparative ease in the market which has been so [illegible] of late

In San Francisco at latest mail advices there seemed to be a light tendency among capitalists and money lenders toward [illegible] paper and loans were light under the close scrutiny which [illegible] offered securities [illegible] under [illegible] Lenders are exercising more than usual discrimination and the movement is necessarily slow Call loans are 8@10 per cent on approved notes or first class collaterals The savings banks are putting out but little money at present and their rates vary from 8 to 12 per cent but the bulk of business with them is at 9 per cent

A resolution has been presented in Congress asking that body to declare null and void all contracts specifying gold as the only coin of settlement upon which the San Francisco Bulletin justly remarks that in the discussion of the financial question which has been going on in this country during the past two years a great many crude and silly things have been said and printed but nothing more absurd than such a resolution Congress has about as much to do with a specific contract as the man in the moon Where no special agreement has been made obligations may be discharged with any kind of current money No honorable man however will seek to liquidate a debt in any other money than that naturally called for simply because he can legally do so with a currency that is at a discount with that expected by the creditor It always has been and always will be lawful for a man to specify what kind of dollars he will accept for his property or his services and no power on earth independent of the parties interested can annul contracts of that sort

Losses in Railway Investments

The American Railway Age contains an important statement regarding the foreclosure and sale of bankrupt railroads in the United States during 1877 The foreclosures cover 3 875 miles of road with bonded debt of $119 938 000 and capital stock of $79 [illegible]000 Most of the stock was swept away and the estimated losses were $100,000 000 [illegible] miles more of road were also ordered sold with bonds and floating debt of $1,8[illegible]3,000 and capital stock of $126 9[illegible]1 000 and in the latter cases the loss will not probably be less than $150 000 000 more In the previous year 3 846 miles of road were foreclosed and sold with $218 030 000 of debt and capital For the two years the shrinkage and loss is estimated at about $350 000 000

The Wool Trade.

While supplies of wool in the manufacturing centers at the east are comparatively small manufacturers appear to be somewhat indifferent about making purchases. The movement in goods for some months past has been so unsatisfactory that they hesitate to provide raw material for future wants Prices are not very firm, and the promises of remunerative rates to growers are hardly so good as one year ago but the turn in affairs at the opening of the spring trade may materially improve the outlook The following shows the production and consumption in the United States last year

Domestic Produce.

We make no change in quotations to day although several commodities appear to be rather weaker than before Wheat is in light receipt and as there is but one vessel the Bristol Wyn here to load but little influence exists to stimulate activity in the market The interruption in telegraphic communication is doing much to paralyze trade as all indications pointed to a decline at latest advices and only such as have contracts to fill are willing to purchase at current quoted rates Flour is in very fair supply and market in buyers favor Oats are not in very large receipt, but still quotations given show no appreciating tendency Mill feed is firm at the former figures and stocks very moderate in quantity Potatoes and onions are plentiful and prices steady as given Other products unchanged

A Vigorous Raid.

CHICAGO Jan 29—The Times Lerdo speci[illegible] via Brownsville, says a party of Mexica[illegible] mostly from Texas, under command of C[illegible] R. Selinas an adherent of Lerdo, attacked [illegible] towns of Lauaela, Savinas and Hidalgo, [illegible] the state of Tamaulipas, on the 22d in[illegible] seized the principal men of the towns a[illegible] forced them to pay $6 000. Gen. Crook on Indian Affairs.

OMAHA Neb Jan 29—Gen Crook left [illegible] night for the Indian territory on busin[illegible] connected with Indian affairs. In an int[illegible] view, before leaving he said among ot[illegible] things that in his opinion it would be diffic[illegible] to maintain peace on the northern border [illegible] on the Upper Missouri and Yellowsto[illegible] Sitting Bull could not long remain on Brit[illegible] soil because the English there have nothin[illegible] supply the Indians with and the scarcity [illegible] buffalo makes it necessary for the In[illegible] ans to follow the buffalo to their accustom[illegible] stamping ground which is in U. S territo[illegible] Whenever Sitting Bull and his Indians co[illegible] down that far there will be more or less co[illegible] munication between them and other India[illegible] and consequently there will be more or [illegible] trouble The decrease of buffalo is so ra[illegible] that the Indians will soon have to find ot[illegible] means of subsistence, and this will eventu[illegible] compel them to rely on the government [illegible] commit depredations In his opinion, o[illegible] hundred thousand buffaloes have been sla[illegible] tered every year for the past ten years, and [illegible] natural increase is very much less than, t[illegible] The largest portion of the buffaloes killed [illegible] cows and this rate of decrease in the fema[illegible] renders the final extinction of the buffalo [illegible] evitable Gen Crook thought it would [illegible] utterly impossible to prevent Sitting Bull fr[illegible] crossing the border into the United States [illegible] there were 300 miles of unprotected territo[illegible] There are troops on Tongue river on the Y[illegible] lowstone and upper Missouri, and there is [illegible] doubt that they can do much towards che[illegible] ing the Indians from committing any seri[illegible] depredations, still there will always be in t[illegible] upper country more or less danger until [illegible] ting Bull is cleaned out. The agency [illegible] will have communication with Sitting Bu[illegible] forces when they come down.
